An English ship was sunk the other day by a German torpedo and 24 Americans went down. Now, after all that has been said about Americans taking such risks, this country ought to pass it up without notice.

MORE ELECTION LAW TROUBLE

Since the Supreme Court has decided that the presidential preferential primary election is unconstitutional, the question has been raised by Chairman Paul Waples of the Democratic executive Committee as to the status of the run-off primary for the United States Senator. The Courts held in the presidential primary that the state shall not pay the expenses of such election and Mr. Waples has asked the Attorney General to say whether or not the expense of a second senatorial primary comes under the same rule. The democrats in State Convention declare for a majority nomination and the legislature enacted a law to that end, but possibly it must suffer the same fate of the presidential law.

With five or six Senatorial candidates in the field, it is hardly probable that any one will get a majority of all the votes cast, and without a second vote as between the highest two, the majority law will be of no effect.

Mr. Waples has raised a pertinent question and it is expected the Attorney General will give his decision as early as possible, so the people may know what to do.
